

EVERYTHING I NEEDED TO LEARN ABOUT LIFE I DISCOVERED DURING MY DIVORCE

As a professional counselor I dealt with just about everything. I worked with people in all forms of crisis from sexual abuse, sudden death of loved ones, chemical dependency, and more personal horror than I wish to recall. But, when it came to my own life I suddenly was left with no answers when my marriage fell apart. Suddenly all my friends melted away like a snowball in July. The battle lines were drawn. Church, friends, children, and everything I once held as life was on one side and I was standing on the other. I felt like a naked man with a slingshot standing against the advancing hoards of Alexander the Great. I had no answers. Now the teacher was the student. One of the greatest lessons learned was that I had things to get too complicated. Theology, relationships, religion, even self image had become so full of expectations, rules and regulations, schedules, demands, and just stuff that I had lost sight of the simple. As I was living in my office and trying to stave off the suffocating loneliness I realized I had become something that I could not even recognize. I had left the simplicity with which my parents raised me. I started hearing the simple practicality of my dad's voice again. I hope you enjoy some of the same basic horse sense and maybe save yourself some un-necessary heart ache.
