

Dead Serious: What Not to Say to a Suicidal Person

I have been a suicidal thinker since late childhood and have tried to kill myself eight times in the last fifteen years, the last time at age forty-six. If there is one thing I have some serious and unfortunate experience in, it is about suicide and the ensuing treatments and drugs, and cruelest of all are some of the horrible things said while one is most fragile and desperate. Things like, You're lucky, you know You should be very grateful It is very selfish to do such a thing Obviously, you were in your wrong mind Think how much pain you are causing your family This is just a cry for attention This is a weak act This is a very sick thing to do This is crazy You should be sorry Suicide is a sin against God You should be happy. Please. Please. Stop I'm not going to say anything like that to you. My main goal is not to say THE WRONG THING. Robin Frey graduated from the Rhode Island School of Design. She has two daughters and lives in Mystic, Connecticut. Robin is currently illustrating a children's book.
